Minnesota is known as the "Land of 10,000 Lakes," or “Star of the North.

Indigenous Peoples

The word "Minnesota" is a Sioux Indian word. It means "cloudy water," or “sky-tinted water.” For thousands of years native peoples had used Minnesota waterways for transportation, food, and to develop an extensive trade relationship with other tribes. In addition to fishing and hunting, they grew wild rice in the lands near the many lakes. Minnesota is centered within Dakota creation stories and is an important place in traditional Ojibwe history. The Oto, Ho-Chunk, Cheyenne, Iowa, and the Sac & Fox tribes also acknowledge Minnesota as important to their tribal histories. A general overview of Dakota and Ojibwe histories, beliefs and cultures is found in the Native American section of the Historic Fort Snelling website - http://www.mnhs.org/fortsnelling/learn/native-americans

By the end of the 1600s, Europeans had arrived in Minnesota to stay. Their attempts to settle created a difficult relationship with the native peoples. Groups from other tribes came or were forced into the area: Arapaho – Cheyenne – Fox - Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska – Missouri - Omaha - Oto – Ottawa - Ponca – Sauk - Winnebago – Wyandot. Conflict arose between the tribes and between the native tribes and the Europeans. The St. Peters Indian Agency worked to maintain the peace between 1820 and 1853. Bit by bit, U.S. treaties with Native Americans forced them off their lands and onto reservations. Seven Ojibwa reservations are now located in northern Minnesota and four Dakota communities occupy lands in the southern part. Other Native Americans live in urban areas.

Tribal headquarters may have some records of Native Americans who lived there years ago. When the U.S. government began confining native tribes to reservations, the Bureau of Indian Affairs set up agencies on or near each reservation. The majority of records of individual Native Americans were created by BIA agencies.

Bureau records can include:

- Allotment records - Annuity rolls
- Census records – Correspondence
- Health records – Reports
- School census and records - Vital records

BIA records are stored at the National Archives in Washington, D.C.

European Exploration and Settlement

The French were the first Europeans to settle in the northern parts of what is now the state of Minnesota. They were fur traders who traded with the Native Americans. Other early immigrants came from Germany, Scandinavia, and parts of Western Europe. At the end of the French and Indian War in 1763, the French ceded their lands to the British. After the Revolutionary War, Britain ceded the land to the U.S. government. The Louisiana Purchase gave the U. S. government ownership of the southwestern area of what is now Minnesota.
Through the years, Minnesota was part of the Northwest Territory, the District of Louisiana, the Louisiana Territory, the Indiana Territory, the Illinois Territory, the Michigan Territory, the Wisconsin Territory, the Iowa Territory, and the Minnesota Territory.

In the 1820s the U.S. government began establishing agencies to control the fur trade. When the Transcontinental Railroad reached the Mississippi River in 1854, travel to Minnesota became easier for immigrants.

Statehood

On May 11, 1858, Minnesota became the 32nd State in the Union. Minnesota was the first state to offer soldiers to fight in the Civil War. Eventually, 24,000 Minnesotans fought for the Union. In 1865, small specks of gold were discovered in quartz stone on Lake Vermillion. Gold seekers flocked to the area. However, the gold rush died out by 1866; very little gold could be found. In 1868, a granite quarry opened in the St. Cloud area.

As railways expanded the railroad companies actively recruited immigrants to settle in the state. Between 1870 and the 1890’s, many immigrants came from Scandinavia and Germany. By the 1870’s, sale of lumber was a booming business in Minnesota. The St. Croix region drew loggers. Towns and cities such as Duluth grew up around saw mills on Lake Superior.

The expansion of railways and the use of steam power enabled residents to export large quantities of white pine to distant markets. The lumber industry reached a peak between the 1890’s and 1910.

Iron ore was discovered on three iron ranges at different times. Mining iron ore became a profitable industry. Many immigrants came to work in the mines. The first ore was shipped from the Vermilion Range in 1884, from the Mesabi Range in 1892, and from the Cuyuna Range in 1911.

Minnesota Land Records
Early settlers began living on unclaimed land and developing it in the early 1800’s. The U.S. government eventually divided all unclaimed land into units and defined them as land patents. The government then sold the land to the settlers in Federal and State Land Offices. U.S. government land patents can be searched by the name of the purchaser on the website of the U. S. Bureau of Land Management (BLMGLO)
