Genealogy Research in Alaska

The name "Alaska" comes from the Aleut word Alaxsxix, meaning "place the sea crashes against."

Indigenous People

People indigenous to the area when Europeans settled and Native Americans now living there include: Iñupiat, Yupik, Aleut, Eyak, Tlingit, Haida, Tsimshian, and a number of Northern Athabaskan cultures. Ancestors of Alaska native people are believed to have migrated into the area thousands of years ago, in at least two different waves. Some are descendants of a third wave of migration in which people settled across the northern part of North America but they never migrated to southern areas. For this reason, genetic studies show they are not closely related to Native Americans in South America.

Most current Native American and Inuit communities in Alaska are organized into Native villages. Each village is considered a separate tribe or entity. The twelve Alaska Native Regional Corporations are administrative groups. Each corporation administers multiple villages and small tribes living in their geographical region.

Note: Eskimo is a name given by non-native Americans to members of the Inuit, Inupiat and Yupik tribes.

Russian Settlement of Alaska:

1741: The area was discovered by Vitus Bering, a Danish explorer and officer in the Russian Navy. Russians began to trade with Alaska Natives and established settlements around them. Competition grew between Russian fur trade companies. They merged into fewer, larger and more powerful corporations, causing conflicts that aggravated the relations with the indigenous population.

1763: Catherine the Great proclaimed good will toward the Aleut and urged her subjects to treat them fairly. On some islands and parts of the Alaska Peninsula, groups of traders had relative peace with the local inhabitants. In other areas, hostility erupted between the native inhabitants and the new settlers. Indigenous families were forced to leave their villages.

1783: Russian fur traders established the first white settlement on Kodiak Island.

1790: Alexander Baranov managed the trading post for the Shelikov Company.

1799: Baranov found Redoubt Saint Michael, or "Old Sitka." He had been hired as Chief Manager of the Russian-American Company, a colonial trading company chartered by the Tsar. In effect, he served as an unofficial governor of the Russian colony in America.

British and American fur traders

1800's: British and Americans began trading in the area.

1802: A group of Tlingit destroyed "Old Sitka" and massacred most of the Russian inhabitants. Baranov was forced to levy 10,000 rubles in ransom for the safe return of the surviving settlers.

1804: Baranov returned to Sitka with a large contingent of Russians and Aleuts aboard the Russian warship Neva. The ship bombarded the natives' village, forcing the Tlingits to retreat into the surrounding forest. Following their victory at the Battle of Sitka, the Russians established a permanent settlement in the form of a fort named "Novoarkhangelsk" (or "New Archangel")

1808: With Baranov still governor, Sitka was designated the capital of Russian America.

1824-1828: In treaties with the United States and Great Britain, Russia agreed to recognize latitude 54° 40 N as Alaska's southern boundary and longitude 141° as the eastern boundary. Further boundary adjustments between Alaska and British Columbia were made in 1903.

1848: The Cathedral of St. Michael, the seat of the Bishop of Kamchatka, the Kurile and Aleutian Islands, and Alaska, was built in Sitka.

United States Government

18 October 1867: The United States purchased Alaska from Russia.
1880: First Federal Census in this territory especially enumerated.
1884: Congress passed the first Organic Act, providing a governor and federal courts for Alaska.
1896: The gold strike on Bonanza Creek started a rush to the Canadian Yukon Territory. Gold was discovered at Nome in 1899 and at Fairbanks in 1902. The gold rush brought over 50,000 persons into the region.
3 January 1959: Alaska became a state.

Alaska Church History

From the founding of Russian America in 174l, sporadic, informal attempts were made to Christianize the Natives. Russian Orthodox missionaries translated the scriptures into some of the native languages. In 1794, the Russian Orthodox Church established its first mission in North America, at Kodiak Island in southeastern Alaska. In 1799, the church appointed the first American Bishop.

Bishop Innokentii of the Russian Orthodox Church lived in Sitka after 1840. He was known for his interest in education. Parts of his house served as a schoolhouse. The Russian Bishop's House has since been restored by the National Park Service.

The Cathedral of St. Michael was the seat of the Bishop of Kamchatka, the Kurile and Aleutian Islands, and Alaska. It was built in Sitka in 1848.The original church burned to the ground in 1966, but it was restored to its original appearance, with the deliberate exception of its clockface, which is black in photographs taken prior to 1966, but white in subsequent photos.

During World War II many records of Russian Orthodox baptisms, marriages, and deaths were sent to the Library of Congress to be translated and indexed. Microfilm copies for 1816 to 1936 are on 25 films at the National Archives and at the Alaska Bureau of Vital Statistics. An index of these records is online in Alaska, Vital Records, 1816 – 1959 on FamilySearch.org.

Swedes and Finns were both important parts of the Russian empire, and the Sitka Lutheran Church, built in 1840, was the first Protestant church on the Pacific Coast. After the transfer of Alaska from Russia to the United States in 1867, influence of other Protestant religions increased, and St. Peter's by-the-Sea Episcopal Church was consecrated as "The Cathedral of Alaska" in 1900. Other early churches in Alaska include the Methodist, Moravian, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Note: Many church registers have been collected by the Alaska Bureau of Vital Statistics and used to compile delayed birth certificates. Once the certificate has been generated, the use of the information is stipulated by the Bureau of Vital Statistics just like any other birth record.

Alaska Boroughs

Alaska is not divided into counties; it is divided into boroughs. Many of the more densely populated parts of the state are part of Alaska's eighteen boroughs, which function somewhat similarly to counties in other states.

However, the boroughs do not cover the entire land area of the state. The area not part of any borough is referred to as the unorganized borough.

For the 1970 census, the U.S. Census Bureau, in cooperation with the state, divided the unorganized borough into 11 census areas, each roughly corresponding to an election district. However, these areas exist solely for the purposes of statistical analysis and presentation. They have no government of their own.
