Historical Overview

What is now the state of Nevada was traditionally the homeland of the Pawnee and Arikara tribes and then the Omaha, Ponca, Oto-Missouria, Ioway, and Kansa.

In 1776, Spanish missionaries encountered members of the Paiute, Shoshoni, Walapi, Washoe and Ute tribes. These people had adapted to life in the Great Basin, the valleys between the Sierra Nevada and Wasatch Mountains.

Living in brush shelters and wickiups, small family groups moved to take advantage of natural resources. They hunted small and large animals, such as jackrabbits, antelope, and waterfowl; gathered pine nuts and berries; and dug roots and tubers. Enough food was harvested every summer and fall to carry them through the winters. Where the climate allowed it, some also fished and farmed small plots. These people were storytellers and craftsmen, weaving baskets, painting pottery, and making jewelry.

- The Mexican government took control of Nevada in 1821.
- Beginning in the 1820s, explorers and fur trappers such as Jedediah S. Smith, Peter Skene Ogden, Kit Carson, and Gen. John C. Fremont came into Nevada's wilderness.
- More people came when the Spanish Trail opened in southern Nevada about 1830.
- Joseph Walker led the first wagon train over the Sierra Mountains in 1843. The Donner Party crossed the Sierras in 1846.
- Interaction with white explorers, trappers and pioneers brought the indigenous tribe members into contact with different weapons, foods, cattle and sheep, horses and wagons, and diseases.
- Cultural differences were especially noticeable regarding land: white settlers desired to buy land and live on it permanently. The tribe members occupied land for short periods of time, moving to follow seasonal cycles of natural resources to obtain food, clothing and shelter.
- In 1848, Mexico ceded the lands encompassing Nevada to the United States.
- Small Mormon settlements developed near the Utah border. Mormon Station was the first permanent settlement established in 1850 in the Carson Valley; Genoa Lakes and Mormon Station Historic Park encompass the area now.
- Utah Territory was created in 1850. It included most of present-day Nevada.
- Then the Comstock silver lode was discovered; the Comstock Silver Mine began operating in Virginia City in 1859. Carson City was also founded the same year; gold-seekers came from as far away as California and Europe. For years, the mining operations generated immense fortunes and spurred advances in mining technology.
- The burgeoning population caused the U.S. Congress to make Nevada a territory in 1861.
- Then in 1864 Nevada became a state. State lawmakers adopted the community property system of marital law which allowed women to own property separately.
- By the 1860's, so many settlers inhabited the area of the Great Basin that the Native tribes struggled to find food. The U.S. government attempted to make a treaty with the tribes in 1866. This didn't work out very well.
- In 1869, the transcontinental railroad crossed Nevada. That same year, state lawmakers legalized gambling.

- The U.S. Mint was established in Carson City in 1870.
- In the 1870's, the U.S. government created new laws that defined Indian tribes as "domestic dependent nations and wards of the federal governments" and attempted to move all Native Americans onto reservations.
- By 1874, most silver had been mined from the Comstock lode. The Nevada economy fell.
- In the late 1800's, the state attempted to improve the economy by introducing sheep farming. The sheep industry increased the ethnic diversity of the population, bringing English, Scots, Mexicans, Irish, Chinese, and Basques to the state. However, conflict developed between cattlemen and sheep men. Finally, in 1934, the Taylor Grazing Act divided the open range.
- Beginning in 1887, the U.S. federal government exercised an Allotment and Assimilation policy on Native Americans. The Dawes Act divided tribal land into individual parcels and halted communal land use. It took more land from the tribal peoples. Government schools were an attempt to force the tribes to give up their cultural traditions and assimilate into mainstream society.

When a new lode of silver ore was discovered at Tonopah Springs by rancher David Butler in 1900, thousands came to the new mining camps. The Butler mining camp was renamed Tonopah in 1905 and became known as the "Queen of the Silver Camps."

In 1910, the state abolished gambling.

In 1914, women won the right to vote in Nevada.

- Various companies mined gold, silver, copper and lead in the Tonopah area throughout the early 1900's. By the 1930's, few minerals were available. Production decreased until the remaining mines closed during the 1940's.
- In 1931, Nevada legalized gambling again, and the state also legalized a 6-week divorce.
- The U.S. government completed construction of the Hoover Dam in 1935.
- By 1934, the U.S. government realized that the Native Americans in Nevada suffered from extreme poverty. The new Indian Reorganization Act gave American citizenship to Native Americans. It encouraged them to govern themselves and to incorporate their land as trusts. Tribal colonies formed; colony leaders implemented various plans for self-reliance and creating their own local businesses. However, , the Bureau of Indian Affairs often interfered and hampered their efforts, sometimes cutting off needed federal aid. Finally, in 1970, President Richard Nixon's policy of Tribal Self-Determination gave true autonomy to the tribes. Free from federal oversight, they still receive federal aid as needed.
- Hotel and casino development boomed in the 1940s when the Las Vegas strip was established. Reno and Lake Tahoe resorts grew, offering quick marriages and 6-week divorces to tourists. Tourism is still the primary source of income for the state today.

Nevada Land Records

Nevada is a Public-Domain State. The first U.S. District Land Office was opened in Carson City, in 1862. The National Archives in Washington, D.C. and the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) Nevada State Office in Reno store records of land granted or sold in Nevada's federal land offices. The Nevada State Library and Archives has Carson County (Utah Territory) land records and land patents for the state. Search federal Land Office grants, including homestead records, and view the patents on the BLMGLO website.

Mining dominated the economy and politics of Nevada for a half century. In 1866 alone, 200 mining districts acted roughly as a court system in that they recorded deeds, transferred titles to claims, drew abstracts, and recorded a variety of land instruments. Mining deeds and related records may be found at the Nevada State Library and Archives. The archives also store state mine inspection records (1909-'74) for operating mines.

Private property records are usually located in the respective office of the County Recorder.
