History

Pueblo Dwellers:

Many people living in present-day New Mexico at the time that the Spanish began exploring there lived in communities of above-ground pueblos, growing corn and other vegetables and hunting game for meat. There were pueblo villages along the Rio Grande valley and in the Chama River valley, Taos area, and Galisteo Basin. The Tewa village of Ohkay Owingeh was located near the confluence of the Rio Grande and the Rio Chama.

The agricultural pueblo-dwellers may have been of Anasazi or Chaco origin. They developed crafts of pottery-making and basket-weaving. The Taos pueblo dwellers became skilled artisans in leather-working, fashioning boots, moccasins, garments, and drums.

The Pueblo of Isleta was a village of Tigua/Tiwa people located about 10 miles south of present-day Albuquerque.

By the 1500's, the Mansos tribes inhabited the El Paso and Mesilla Valley region.

Pueblo dwellers alternately traded and fought with plains tribes.

Other native peoples who had been conquered by the Spanish began inhabiting pueblos in the 1800's.

They included the Piros, Tompiros, Tiwas, Tanos and Jemez tribes.

The Athabascans:

By the 1400's, Navajo and Apache groups had migrated from Canada to the Pecos River Valley. Their groups included the Chiricahua, Lipan, Mescalero, Plains, Western, White Mountain, and Jicarilla tribes. The Jicarilla Apache established adobe villages, farmed small, irrigated fields, and continued hunting bison. They had frequent contact with the Pueblo tribes and later with the Spanish settlements of northern New Mexico.

The Navajo adopted horses and sheep from the Spanish and became herders. Though they farmed, their lives increasingly centered on the movement of their sheep herds to grazing areas in summer and in winter. They traded with the Pueblos for food, exchanging meat and hides for corn and other produce. Their sacred mountains were in what is now the Four Corners Area and beyond. They joined with the Pueblo people during the period of struggle with the Spanish, retreating to hidden sites far from the settlers and sharing living quarters and defense.

Spanish settlement:

The first Europeans to explore present-day New Mexico were the Spanish. In 1598, they settled in the Tewa village of Ohkay Owingeh at the confluence of the Rio Grande and the Rio Chama and renamed the village San Juan.

The Spanish settled the city of Santa Fe at the base of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains in 1609. The San Miguel Chapel built in Santa Fe in 1610 is the oldest church structure in the U. S. today.

Spanish oppression of Pueblo peoples stirred several unsuccessful revolts during the 1600s. The strife culminated in a massive, coordinated revolt by pueblo peoples in August 1680, which forced hundreds of Spanish colonists and officials to retreat south along the Rio Grande to El Paso.

Then in 1700, the Spanish regained control of the area.

In 1706, they founded Albuquerque from surrounding communities.

As Spanish settlers continued to move into Navajo homelands in the 1700's, the Navajos raided Spanish and Pueblo villages alike, creating a period of conflict toward the end of the century.

The Spanish remained in control until the early 1800's.

Mexican ownership:

In 1821, Mexico fought Spain, achieved independence and began governing New Mexico. Mexico established trade with the United States along the Santa Fe Trail. Later, the Santa Fe Trail became a favorite route of people heading to the California gold fields.

U. S. Territories:

In 1848, Mexico ceded New Mexico to the U. S. after it's defeat in the Mexican-American War. Between 1846 and 1849, the United States government established treaties with the Navajos in an unsuccessful attempt to stop Navajo raids.

Congress created the New Mexico Territory September 9, 1850. It included parts of what are now Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado. Socorro, San Miguel, Taos, Rio Arriba, Valencia, Santa Fe, Doña Ana and Bernalillo Counties were formed in 1852.

In 1857, a law prohibited free blacks and mulattos from living in New Mexico Territory.

In 1861, the creation of the Colorado Territory reduced the size of New Mexico Territory. During the Civil War, the Confederacy claimed the southern tract of New Mexico Territory as Confederate Arizona Territory. However, the Confederacy was defeated in the Battle of Glorieta Pass in 1862 and the area returned to U.S. possession.

In 1863, Congress created the Arizona Territory from part of New Mexico Territory.

Also in 1863, Gen. James S. Carleton implemented a successful "scorched earth" policy to defeat Navajo forces. The Navajos who did not surrender were forced to walk over 300 miles to Bosque Redondo Reservation, an internment camp along the Pecos River in eastern New Mexico.

Then in 1868, the U.S. - Navajo Treaty was signed, which allowed the Navajo to return to a smaller portion of their original homeland mountains in Arizona and in New Mexico.

In 1886, the Apache Wars ended when Geronimo surrendered to Brigadier General Nelson Miles. The Apache people were sent to reservations in Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma.

Railroads:

The first operational railroad, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway, entered New Mexico Territory via the Raton Pass in 1878. The Southern Pacific Railroad came in through the Arizona Territory in 1880 while the Denver & Rio Grande Railway came in through Colorado. The railroads stimulated European settlement in eastern and southern New Mexico. Conflicting land claims between ranchers, homesteaders and the old Spanish families were finally settled by 1904.

U.S. Statehood:

New Mexico became a state on January 6, 1912.

New Mexico Land and Property

Colonial Land Grants

Beginning in the late 1500's, Spain offered proprietary land grants and sitio (ranch) grants to European individuals. Spain also granted communal land grants to groups of European settlers to create settlements and to indigenous pueblo peoples to preserve their culture and land. Nearly all of the Spanish records of land grants prior to the Pueblo Revolt of 1680 were destroyed in the revolt. Thus, historians can often only be certain of land grants that were made after the Spanish Reconquest of New Mexico in 1693.

The country of Mexico offered land grants after it wrested control of the area from Spain in 1821. When the United States acquired the area in 1848, claims relating to Spanish and Mexican grants were processed by the U.S. Surveyor General from 1855 to 1890, and by the U. S. Court of Private Land Claims from 1891 to 1903.

Various microfilms of early land grant records are located in the Family History Library, Salt Lake City. The Catalog on familysearch.org indicates which films have been digitized and can be read on the website.

Public Domain Land Sales

The U.S. Congress passed various laws regarding the distribution of unsettled land in the public domain when New Mexico became a U. S. Territory. These laws created many types of land grants. The land was sold in land offices beginning in 1858 at Santa Fe.

The land entry case files, indexes to pre-1908 patents, and original tract books and township plats of the general land offices are at the National Archives.

The patents and copies of the tract books and township plats are at the Bureau of Land Management, New Mexico State Office.

Private Land Sales

After land was transferred to private ownership, subsequent records, including land sales, deeds and mortgages, were recorded by the county clerks. Obtain copies from county clerk offices.
