History

The peoples living in the Dakotas when Europeans came were the Mandans, the Hidatsas and Arikaras. Eastern tribes that were forced into the area included Crow, Cheyenne, Creek, Assiniboine, Yanktonai Dakota, Teton Dakota, and Chippewa.

In 1610 Henry Hudson claimed part of eastern North Dakota for the English.

In 1682 LaSalle claimed parts of North Dakota for France.

In the 1700's, Dakota Territory extended north into what is now Canada. European claims of the land passed between the French, Spanish, and English. Fur traders arrived in the last part of the 1700's, hunting the rich river lands for furs. They were employed by the Missouri Fur Company.

The smallpox epidemics in 1782 and 1786 wiped out three-fourths of the Mandans and half of the Hidatsas.

In 1800, Alexander Henry Jr. established a post at Park River which soon became the site of the first white settlement in North Dakota.

Europeans settled two areas in 1812. Selkirk Colony developed at the confluence of the Red and Assiniboine rivers in what is now downtown Winnipeg. South of Selkirk, Pembina was established by Scottish pioneers from Canada. However, conditions were so difficult that by 1823 Pembina had been abandoned.

In 1822, Selkirk became Fort Garry, a Hudson's Bay Company trading post. It served as the center of the fur trade in the Red River colony. Many of the residents were 'half-breeds' (called mÃ©tis), the offspring of European fathers (French, Canadian, Scottish, and English) and Native American mothers (Chippewa, Creek, Assiniboine).

The epidemic of 1837, probably introduced by white fur traders, devastated the native population.

In 1849, the southeastern Dakota area became part of the Minnesota Territory. A few Europeans settled in the region.

In 1861 Dakota Territory was created from parts of Nebraska and Minnesota Territories. Forts were established to protect settlers and travelers who were going west.

When railroads reached the Red River from St. Paul and Duluth, more settlers immigrated into the area.

In 1870, after much contention between the native residents and white settlers, the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation was established. Treaties between the Sioux and Chippewa nations and the U.S. government ceded most of eastern North Dakota land to the Federal government.

European settlement boomed from 1879 to 1886. The population increased from 16,000 people to 191,000.

Settlers purchased land either from the Northern Pacific Railroad or from the U.S. government under the Homestead and Timber Culture acts.

The Pembina Land Office was opened by the federal government in 1871. By 1890, 19,500 settlers had purchased three million acres.

However, many settlers eventually moved out of North Dakota to areas where they could make a better living. North Dakota land was far from centers of commerce. The dry climate often caused drought. Farming income was low and there was little manufacturing.

In 1889, the Dakota Territory was divided. North and South Dakota became states and were admitted to the Union.

Statehood created a second population boom. The land was heavily promoted. Between 1898 and World War 1, e 250,000 immigrants moved to the state. People settled along the Great Northern Railroad, the Missouri River Plateau, and the Drift Prairie.

The peak year for new homesteads was 1906. However, again difficult circumstances caused some of the new settlers to eventually move to other areas.

Birth and Death Records

Few births were recorded before 1893, when North Dakota became a state and required counties to record births and deaths. Compliance was low at first. In 1895, the state repealed the birth registration law, but in 1899 it reenacted the law!

In 1923, the North Dakota Department of Vital Records was formed.   Counties were required to send all birth and death records to the state.

The Division of Vital Records birth records begin in 1870 and death records begin in 1881. Some counties also have copies of their birth and death records.

Contact the County Clerk of Court (or County Recorder) to determine what years of birth and death records you can order from that county.

Order certified or non-certified copies of birth or death records from the North Dakota Division of Vital Statistics.

Marriage and Divorce Records
Counties began recording marriages when they were formed. Records of marriages and divorces are not sent to the state.
Obtain copies of marriage or divorce records from the County Clerk (or County Recorder).

Native American Vital Records
Records of Native Americans were not kept by the counties or the state.
The Standing Rock Indian Agency (Bureau of Indian Affairs, North Dakota) has records of the Blackfeet Sioux, Hunkpapa Sioux, and Yanktonai Sioux who lived in the North Dakota area.
These can include birth, marriage and death records, censuses, military records, school records, allotment records, and parish records
Records are available to tribal members through tribal headquarters.
Some of the agency records have been microfilmed and are available at the National Archives and at the Family History Library in Salt Lake City.

Censuses of U.S. Indian tribes were taken in various years between 1885 and 1940. They are stored at the National Archives. A searchable database of the Indian Census Rolls is on Ancestry.com. Databases of specific state Indian censuses can be searched on FamilySearch.org.
