Indigenous Inhabitants

1700's: The Caddoe, Pawnee, and Wichita tribes were living in the area now called Oklahoma in the 1700s.

Early 1800's: About the time the United States acquired the area through the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, other tribes such as the Quapaw, Oto, and Osage migrated to eastern Oklahoma.

1820's: The U.S. Government began moving all tribes east of the Mississippi River to the "Indian Territory" in western Arkansas and eastern Oklahoma. A series of treaties provided for the removal of almost all principal eastern tribes. The Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole (known as the Five Civilized Tribes) were among the many southeastern tribes who were removed by treaty to Indian Territory.

1838: the Cherokees who had not already moved voluntarily were forced to move to Indian Territory. This migration became known as the "Trail of Tears." Large parcels of land were distributed to these five tribes who became self-governing "Nations." White settlers who moved west after the Civil War pressured the government to extinguish Indian title to lands and relocate the Indians. The alliance between the Five Civilized Tribes and the Confederacy during the Civil War also provided Congress with an excuse to realign tribal boundaries. Treaties in 1866 and later reduced the land of the Five Civilized Tribes by almost half. These created the "Unassigned Lands" in central Oklahoma that were eventually opened for land runs.

Some of the western land forfeited by the Five Civilized Tribes was reserved for other tribes through later treaties. These lands in the Indian Territory were assigned to tribes such as the Kiowa, Comanche, Wichita, and Cheyenne. Other tribes were later brought in at various periods from Texas, Nebraska, California, Oregon, Idaho, Arizona, and other states. As many as 65 tribes were eventually relocated to the state.

The Oklahoma Historical Society lists the last location of tribes before they were removed to Indian Territory at <http://www.okhistory.org/research/oktribes>. The Society gives more detail of their history and culture at <http://digital.library.okstate.edu/encyclopedia/entries/a/am010.html>.

European Settlement

1803: The United States acquired most of the area that is now Oklahoma as part of the Louisiana Purchase. The panhandle remained under Spanish control. The Quapaw, Osage, Oto, and other Indian tribes arrived about this time.

1812: Most of present-day Oklahoma became part of the Missouri Territory. The same area became Arkansas Territory in 1819.

1821: Mexico declared its independence from Spain and the panhandle came under Mexican control.

1838-1850: The Five Civilized Tribes (Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek and Seminole) were removed to Oklahoma-Indian territory.

1845: The United States annexed the Republic of Texas, including the present-day Oklahoma panhandle.

1850: The United States government purchased the panhandle lands from Texas. The panhandle became "No Man's Land," and was unattached to any state or territory.

1854: The Indian Territory was limited to the area of what is now Oklahoma.

1860: Greer County was created by Texas in present-day Oklahoma. This sparsely-settled area was added to Oklahoma in 1896.

1861: The Five Civilized Tribes sided primarily with the Confederacy. Some Indians enlisted in Union regiments early in the war.

1866: New treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes realigned boundaries and allowed the federal government to move other tribes there. Almost two million acres were designated as "Unassigned Lands" in central Oklahoma.

1872: Railroads now crossed the territory.

1889: The federal government purchased the "Unassigned Lands" from the Indians and opened them for white settlement. The first "Land Rush" on April 22, 1889 attracted about 50,000 people.

1890: The Organic Act of 1890 established the Oklahoma Territory. This act organized seven counties in the "Unassigned Lands" and the Oklahoma panhandle ("No Man's Land") and provided for the organization of additional counties as Indian governments were discontinued and surplus land was opened to settlers. During this time, the Oklahoma Territory expanded to fill western Oklahoma by gradually absorbing land owned by Cheyenne, Arapaho, Cherokee, Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes.

1891: The U.S. government opened 900,000 acres of Sauk, Fox and Potawatomi land for general settlement.

1893: The "Cherokee Strip" between Kansas and Oklahoma (6,000,000 acres purchased from the Cherokees) was opened for "Land Rush," attracting 100,000 immigrants.

1897: Thousands of new settlers came when oil was discovered at Bartlesville.

Nov. 16, 1907: The Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory, known as the "twin territories," were combined to become the state of Oklahoma.

Births 1908 to the Present:

Beginning in 1908, state law required registration of births. By 1928, the counties were registering most births.

Ancestry.com - database of some county marriage records between 1890 and 1959

Oklahoma GenWeb - index of marriages between 1855 and 1955

Marriages before 1890:

The area now called Oklahoma was Indian Territory from the 1830's to 1890. Non-Indians wanting to marry traveled to another state, went back home to marry or were married by a minister or ranking officer at a nearby fort. There were no county governments to record marriages.

Marriages 1890 to the Present:

In 1890 Oklahoma was divided into Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory. Three Judicial Districts were established in the Indian Territory where marriages could be performed and recorded:

- First District: at Muskogee included Cherokee and Creek Nations
- Second District: at South McAlester included Choctaw Nation
- Third District: at Ardmore included Seminole and Chickasaw Nations

Some of these records do survive.

In Oklahoma Territory, marriages were recorded at the County Clerk's offices of the county where the marriage occurred.

In November of 1907, the two territories were combined into the State of Oklahoma. Marriages in the state were also recorded in the County Clerks' offices.

Obtain a copy of a marriage record from the Clerk of the county where the marriage occurred.

Oklahoma Death Records

Index:

Oklahoma State Vital Records Index of county birth and death records - <https://ok2explore.health.ok.gov/>

Deaths before 1908:

Before 1908, no deaths of white settlers were recorded by the state. A few earlier death records exist as part of the Chickasaw Nation, Creek Nation, and Cherokee Outlet records. Some of these records may be available through the current County Clerks.

Deaths 1908 to the Present:

Statewide registration of deaths began in Oklahoma in 1908 and was generally complied with by 1930. Records before 1940 were placed on file inconsistently. Although County Clerks record deaths and provide information on request, certificates are available only from the Vital Records Section, State Department of Health.

Before 1900 the largest religious groups in Oklahoma were the Baptist, Roman Catholic, Disciples of Christ, and Methodist churches.

Search local churches for church membership records first. If there are no historical records at the local church, look for church histories, indexes of church baptisms, marriages, or funeral at a local genealogy library or society.
