Overview of History

Four distinct regions in Oregon vary in terrain, climate and resources. These variations shaped the way that the indigenous people lived.

- The Northern Paiutes lived in the southwestern part of the state in the Great Basin. For generations, they walked across the desert to hunt, gather and trade.
- The tribes living along the Northwest Coast usually did not have to travel too far for food; they lived in the fertile Willamette Valley.
- Most of northeastern Oregon plus a big swath down the center of the state was plateau country. In those hills and valleys, the Cayuse,

Umatilla and Walla Walla people prospered as traders. They controlled much of the trade route into the Great Basin to the south, and into Canada to the north.

- In the southern plateau country, the Warm Springs, Wascos, Klamaths, Modocs, and Yahooskins thrived.
- The Spanish are the first documented European explorers of the coast in the 1500's. Juan de Fuca created detailed maps and ocean current studies of the coastline.
- By the 1700's the coastline had become part of a European trading route to Asia. British and Spanish explorers found the Columbia River in "Ouragon" and explored the interior along the river. The indigenous people contracted smallpox from the Europeans; the disease killed large numbers of them and their communities dwindled.
- In 1805, Lewis and Clark traveled down the Clearwater, Snake and Columbia Rivers with help from the Nez Perce people, establishing Fort Clatsop near the mouth of the Columbia River. The expedition notes and drawings provide some of the only written records about the tribes then living along the Columbia River.
- Between 1810 and the 1830's, fur trappers came into Oregon, establishing trading posts with the native tribes. Trappers almost eliminated beavers in the Tualatin Valley.
- The first permanent European settlement was Fort George, or Astoria. It was established near the mouth of the Columbia River in 1811 by the British Pacific Fur Company.
- The Treaty of 1818 enabled Americans and the British to declare joint occupancy of land west of the Rocky Mountains.
- In 1819, Spain and the U.S. established the southern boundary of Oregon by treaty.
- In 1825 the British Hudson Bay Company established Fort Vancouver on the northern bank of the Columbia River. This fort became a hub of the fur business from Russian Alaska south to Mexican California and west out into the Pacific Cook Islands.
- Dr. John McLoughlin, the first Bay Company manager, applied the laws of Upper Canada to British subjects and kept peace with the natives.
- McLoughlin also provided American settlers aid, against the Bay Company's wishes. In 1829, he established the first European-American settlement near a Clackamas village at Willamette Falls. It was later named Oregon City.

- Between 1830 and 1834, 80 - 90% of the indigenous people in the Portland basin and in the Willamette Valley died from “fever and ague”.
- In 1834, Methodists established a mission school in the Willamette Valley near present day Salem. They were unable to convert the native people, but the school remained and years later it became Willamette University. More native people died when they caught measles from the missionaries. Catholic and Presbyterian missionaries came to other areas.
- Settlers followed the missionaries, coming via the Oregon Trail. They often claimed land that the indigenous people used. Decimated by diseases, the native tribes could not keep their lands.
- The first provisional Euro/American government of Oregon was formed at Champoege in the Willamette Valley in 1843, when nine hundred new settlers arrived.
- Portland was platted along the Willamette River in 1844.

- In 1846, the Oregon Treaty established a border between Britain and the U.S. at the 49th parallel. This prevented another war between the two countries. American control stifled the Hudson Bay Company’s operations and in 1860, the British company left Fort Vancouver.
- In 1847 and 1848, a measles epidemic killed Northwest settlers and more indigenous people.
- Oregon Territory was established in 1848. An Exclusion law prevented any “Negro” from residing in the territory. But in 1854, the Territorial Legislature repealed this law.
- In 1850, the remaining warriors of the Cayuse and Umatilla tribes gathered together and fought to regain their lands. They were defeated, and in 1855, the U.S. Army forced the tribe members to move onto reservations. This became a recurring pattern of interaction which destroyed the culture of the Native people and forced tribe members to live on reservations. By the 1870’s, the Cayuse, Kalapuyan, Clackamas, Molalla, Nez Perce, Yakima, Umatilla, Warm Springs, Paiute, Shoshone and other tribes were concentrated in six regional reservations. People with different languages and customs lived next to each other, no longer able to provide for themselves. Neither the U.S. government or the white settlers respected their cultures or gave them adequate support.
- In 1850, gold was discovered in the Rogue River Valley. The U.S. government encouraged settlement by offering free land. Between 1840 and 1860, nearly 53,000 settlers, mostly from Mississippi, Missouri, and the Ohio River valleys, moved to Oregon.
- In 1853, the Oregon Territory was split into the Washington and Oregon Territories.
- In 1855, the first U. S. Land Offices opened in Winchester and Oregon City.
- In 1859, Oregon became a state.
- In 1862, all people of African, Chinese, or Hawaiian heritage were required to pay a tax of $5/year. Interracial marriages were forbidden by law for a time.
- From 1862 - 1864, gold mining brought prosperity to Baker and Grant counties.
- In 1870, the 15th Amendment gave black men the right to vote, forcing social change in Oregon.
- In the 1870’s and over time, some Native American tribes were restored to federally recognized status. In an erratic process that still continues, some tribal organizations have overcome obstacles to prosper financially, promote their cultural heritage and exert political power.

- The transcontinental railroad was completed in Oregon in 1883.
- In 1937, the Bonneville Dam hydroelectric plant was completed on the Columbia River.

Oregon Land Records

Provisional Land Claims:

These were filed with the Provisional Government of Oregon in the Willamette Valley during the period 1845 to 1849. They were filed with the provisional recorder. The records contain a description of the land claimed, and may name adjoining land holders. View an index of these land claims on the GFO website: <https://gfo.org/resources/indexes/pioneer/provisional-land-claims.html> . Order digital or hard copies of abstracts of individual claims.

Applications for the provisional land claims are stored in the Oregon State Archives.

Donation Land Claims:

Individuals who settled in the Oregon Territory before December 1, 1855 were eligible to receive Donation Land Claims. The earlier, provisional claims were voided. The size of the piece of land depended upon the date of the arrival and the marital status of the claimant. The applications for these free lands may provide birth, marriage, citizenship, migration, or other valuable information. View an index of Oregon Donation Land claims on the GFO website. For a fee, order digital or hard copies of entire claim files: <https://gfo.org/resources/indexes/pioneer/donation-land-claims.html>

Federal Land Sales:

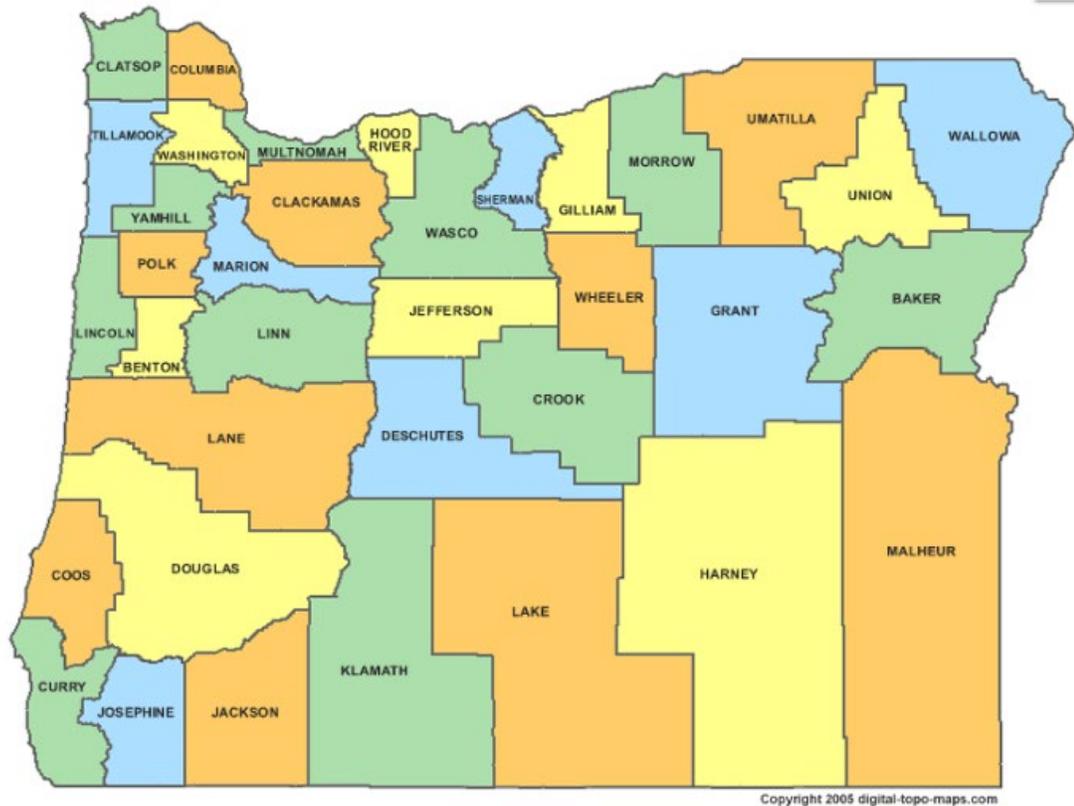

After statehood, federally owned land was bought at General Land Offices. These offices also handled Homestead Applications. Search General Land Office Records at the website of the Bureau of Land Management (BLMGLO). The BLM has published an online fact sheet about Oregon Homesteaders at: https://www.blm.gov/or/landsrealty/homestead150/files/HomesteadingFactSheet_2012.pdf

Private Property Land:

Person to person land sales were recorded by the county in which the land is located. Check the county office which stores property records.
