History

Indigenous Peoples

The people living in present day Wyoming before Europeans came included the Arapaho, Cheyenne, Crow, Shoshoni and Ute tribes. The Crow people followed seasonal abundance through the mountains and plains. The historical record describes American Plains Indians hunting in all corners of Wyoming. Oregon Trail chronicler Francis Parkman encountered Oglala Lakota people hunting bison on the Laramie Plains in 1846 as did the Stansbury Expedition in 1850. In 1857, the Warren survey expedition found Dakotas surrounding a herd of bison in the northern Black Hills.

The Shoshone originally lived in the Wyoming mountains. They hunted bighorn sheep in the mountains, along with deer, elk and many smaller mammals. They also ate fish and insects. They gathered, dried and stored crickets, cicadas and grasshoppers, along with many plants for food or medicine. They crafted ladles from sheep horns and built conical log dwellings, called wickiups, some of which still stand.

Other tribes who lived in present-day Wyoming at various times included Bannock, Gosiute, Kiowa, Kiowa-Apache, Menominee, Numa, and Pawnee. Tribal boundaries fluctuated with weather, game populations and alliances with other tribes. For example, the Comanche, one of the most entrepreneurial of tribes, once were part of the Shoshone tribe. In the middle 18th century they split from the Shoshone and moved south to rule the plains of Texas and Oklahoma.

Wyoming's current trails, roads and highways follow centuries-old Native American hunting and trade routes.

European/American Explorers and Settlers

Portions of what is present day Wyoming were at various times claimed by Spain, France, England and Mexico. By the early 1800's, fur traders, fort builders and emigrant trails began to cross the land.

In 1803, the United States acquired most of present-day Wyoming via the Louisiana Purchase. At the time, this area was inhabited mostly by Shoshone, Arapaho and Crow tribes.

Most of the Louisiana Purchase became the District of Louisiana in 1804; it was then renamed the Louisiana Territory in 1805.

In 1807, John Colter entered Togwotee Pass near Jackson Hole. He explored the geysers and beautiful area that later was designated Yellowstone National Park.

On a trip from present day Astoria, Oregon, to St. Louis in 1811-1812, Robert Stuart explored the route through the "South Pass" of the Rocky Mountains in present day Wyoming. His route would be used by thousands of emigrants on the Oregon, Mormon, and California Trails.

Between 1812 and 1869, parts of the area that is now Wyoming were assigned to 8 different U.S. territories! In 1834, Fort William was founded by William Sublette and his partner Robert Campbell. A year later, Sublette sold the fort to Thomas Fitzpatrick, a local fur trader. The fort became a rest stop and supply depot for fur traders and explorers and later for emigrants traveling west on the Oregon Trail.

During the 1840's, the U.S. Army built forts and stationed troops to protect white settlers and travelers from hostile Native American tribes.

In 1840, the Army built Fort Platte a mile from Fort William. Competition for travelers between the 2 forts resulted in Fort William being rebuilt and renamed Fort John.

The Oregon Trail was established in 1843. Fur trapper Jim Bridger built Fort Bridger on the Blacks Fork of the Green River. He traded with the Shoshone and sold supplies to travelers going west. His business was profitable until years later newly created shortcuts in the Oregon Trail moved it 100 miles away from the fort!

In 1846, a treaty with Great Britain gave more land in present day Wyoming to the U.S.

In 1847, Latter Day Saints established a ferry on the North Platte River into Wyoming for travelers going west.

In 1848, the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo ended the Mexican-American War and gave the southwestern corner of what is now Wyoming to the U.S.

In 1849, the U.S. Army bought Fort John and renamed it Fort Laramie.

In 1849 - 1850, some Cherokees in Oklahoma caught gold fever. They traveled the Cherokee (Overland) Trail to Fort Bridger where they joined the Oregon/California Trail.

In 1851, a treaty was signed near Fort Laramie in which Indian tribes allowed wagon trains access to the Oregon Trail as well as the building of roads and forts.

William Vaux and his daughter Victoria opened the first school in Wyoming at Fort Laramie in 1852.

In 1853, Ft. Supply, an agricultural settlement, was set up by Latter Day Saints near Ft. Bridger. It prospered until 1857, when it was deserted and burned.

In 1859, Platte Bridge Station was established near what is now Casper on the North Platte River. The station was purchased by the Army in 1862.

In 1860, the Pony Express began its brief period of service. It ended when the transcontinental telegraph line was completed at Salt Lake City in 1861.

In the 1860's, Fort Laramie was a stopping point for travelers on horse and wagon, for stagecoach riders as well as the Pony Express riders.

1861-65: No Civil War battles were fought in the area that is now Wyoming. However, some men from the territories fought in Union units during the war.

In 1862, Fort Halleck was established on the Overland (Cherokee) Trail in southern Wyoming. The Overland Stage Line began using the Overland Trail instead of the Oregon Trail.

In 1865, bands of Lakota, Cheyenne, and Arapaho Native Americans attacked the Platte Bridge Station. After the battle, the station was renamed Fort Caspar in honor of Caspar Collins who had been killed.

From 1867 to 1869, the Transcontinental Union Pacific Railway was built through southern Wyoming. The towns of Cheyenne, Laramie, Rawlins, Rock Springs, Green River, and Evanston sprang up along its route.

The Sioux Treaty of 1868 was signed at Fort Laramie. The U.S. government guaranteed that the sacred Black Hills would be part of the Sioux reservation.

Coal mining prospered in the late 1860's and the 1870's in present-day Sweetwater County. Companies brought in Chinese men to work in the mines. Towns such as Atlantic City, Miner's Delight, Red Canyon, and South Pass City supported mining and offered supporting industries.

In 1869, Wyoming Territory granted women the right to vote and the transcontinental railroad was completed.

In the 1870's, the cattle industry boomed; cowboys drove cattle from the south into Wyoming and Montana.

In 1872, Yellowstone became the first U.S. national park. The Wyoming Territorial Prison was established at Laramie.

In defiance of the Sioux Treaty, General George Custer and his troops led gold miners into the Black Hills in 1874.

The Cheyenne-Black Hills stage line was launched in 1876 and Ft. McKinney was established. That same year, General Custer was defeated by Sioux hunters in the Battle of Little Big Horn.

From 1876 - 1880's, the U. S. government moved Arapaho and Cheyenne tribes to the Wind River Reservation. Army troops finally defeated the Sioux, and northern Wyoming was opened to cattle grazing.

Electrical lighting was introduced in Cheyenne in 1883.

The especially severe winter of 1886-1887 killed thousands of cattle in "the Great Die-Up."

Outlaws roamed the plains, canyons and mountains of post-Civil War Wyoming. In response, the Territorial Legislature planned a state-of-the art penitentiary at Rawlins in anticipation of statehood.

Statehood

On July 10, 1890, Wyoming became the 44th state. At that time one-fourth of Wyoming's population was from European countries, Canada, Russia, and China.

The Johnson County War erupted in 1892 between ranchers in the area around the Powder River Basin.

The Carey Act of 1894 provided for the reclamation and homesteading of desert land, stimulating new settlements in northern Wyoming between 1895 and 1910. Latter Day Saints established towns in the Big Horn Basin. A small German-Russian colony from Chicago arrived in the Big Horn Basin in 1896.

In 1898, men from Wyoming served in the Spanish American War.

In 1901, the long-planned Wyoming State Penitentiary (Frontier Prison) was completed in Rawlins. It housed prisoners from 1901 - 1981.

In 1902, the Yellowstone Forest Reserve (Shoshone National Forest) became the first U.S. National Forest.

In 1906, Devil's Tower became the country's first national monument.

From 1906 to 1909, troops were stationed at the Wind River Reservation to prevent hostilities between Shoshone Indians and homesteaders during the allotment of reservation lands.

In 1909, the government began promoting homesteading and dry farming in Wyoming. Up through the peak years of 1920 -1921, much public land was sold in Wyoming. But the depression and years of drought severely challenged the farming industry.

After World War II, the economy focused on cattle, crude oil, and petroleum and their supporting industries.

Today Wyoming remains sparsely populated; tourism is a major industry.

Wyoming Land Records

Public Domain Land Sales

When the United States acquired Wyoming, most of the became part of the public domain. The federal government surveyed available land and made it available local land offices in Cheyenne, Evanston, Buffalo, Lander, Sundance and Douglas.

Land was sold in Wyoming either based on cash payment (cash entries), or as a homestead. Free homesteads could be obtained after 1862 by those who settled and cultivated the land for at least five years. After a settler completed the requirements for land entry, his case file was sent to the General Land Office in Washington, D.C., where a patent (first-title deed) was issued.

Federal Land Patents are searchable and images available online at the General Land Office website (BLMGLO) - <https://glorerecords.blm.gov/>. Land Patents on their site include Cash Entry, Homestead and Military Warrant patents. Survey Plats and Field Notes are also online.

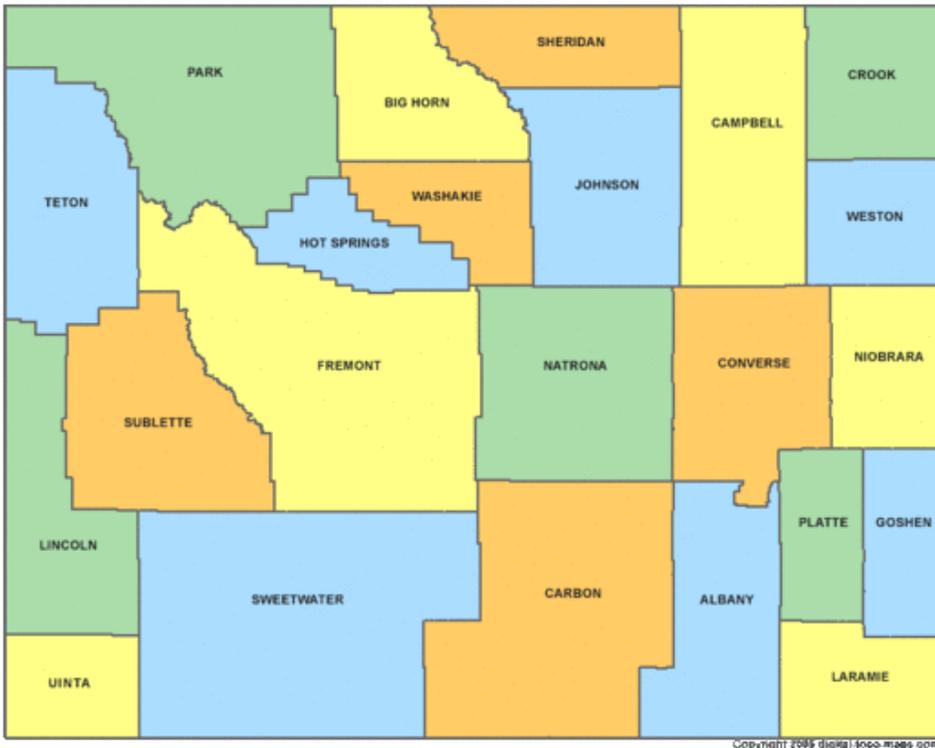

Private Land Sales

After land was transferred to private ownership, it could be sold again, inherited, lost by foreclosure of a mortgage, or distributed through a divorce. Deeds and mortgages are recorded by the county district courts. Obtain copies from the appropriate County Clerk's Office.
